

Judah Joslyn (he/him) is the Executive Director for the Trans and Queer Youth Collective (TQYC). He is also a local activist and advocate for social justice issues, including trans and queer rights, Black liberation, protections for unhoused community members, climate change, and disability rights. Judah has long been involved with social justice movements centering on the most marginalized within society. He actively works to create an anti-racist society that uplifts voices that have been systematically oppressed.

Judah is currently involved in many different projects around the greater Sacramento area. He seeks to continue his liberation work through supporting organizations that uplift and support community members that have been marginalized. He is currently earning his Master's in Clinical Mental Health Counseling from Oregon State University to expand his work through TQYC to bring trans and queer youth vital mental health services.

He enjoys spending time with his family, working on home improvement projects, camping, and hiking around the United States.

“The truth of the world is glossed over by many, but when we become awakened to the needs of our world, we become compelled to act and fight for everyone’s right to live an authentic and joyous life.”
